To Resettle Jews In Israel As Pressure Converts More To Refugee Status

The Inter-governmental Migration Committee will assist in the resettlement in Israel of 2,000 European Jews, officials announced at Geneva. An agreement with the Israeli Government provides that the committee will handle the transport of these immigrants, while Jewish organizations, possibly the Jewish Agency for Palestine, will make the pre-embarkation arrangements.

Only those Jews who left their country of citizenship after August 1 and only those going to Israel for permanent settlement will be eligible for this program. Hugh Gibson, director of the migration committee, estimated that the cost of this program would be $106,000.

This is the migration committee's first operation on behalf of emigrants to Israel, as well as its first program directed specifically to the problems of newly arriving refugees. Pressure on Jews in Communist countries is converting more and more of them to refugee status. At the same time, says the New York Times, arrangements for the emigration of Jews to Israel by agreement with the Communist Governments are getting harder and harder to establish.

In general, the movement of Europeans from their overcrowded continent to new homes in the Western Hemisphere and other suitable parts of the world is too slow for Europe's social and political needs, in the opinion of experts at Geneva.

Many governments are allowing migration problems to be handled at relatively low levels. They hold the comfortable belief that the special immigration programs of the United States, Canada and Australia are big enough to provide the safety valve needed by the European countries whose economies are too narrow to support present and prospective populations. But the safety valve is only sputtering while population pressures are building up constantly to more and more dangerous levels.

The migration committee has ships to transport migrants and trained personnel to handle the innumerable kinds of processing to which migrants must submit today. If it reaches its objective of 100,000 migrants moved during its first year, which is about half over, the committee will have proved that economical mass movements under international auspices are practicable. But it will have made no perceptible dent in the overpopulation problem.

Most of the persons being transferred by the committee are Germans who are entering the United States under special legislation, which has now expired. Dutch, Germans, Austrians and Scandinavians also are going to Canada or Australia under programs that, too, are running out.

No new United States legislation to ease the entry of immigrants has been adopted. Canada and Australia both have discovered that they must cut the rate of inflow for perhaps half a year to absorb the hundreds of thousands of immigrants that they have already accepted, according to the New York Times.

But even assuming the resumption of Canadian and Australian immigration on a scale of perhaps

Seminar For Industry And Labor Aids Output

Twenty-two members of the Israeli Productivity Institute—representatives of Histadrut, the labor organization, the government, of the manufacturers' association and the engineers' association—have been listening to and exchanging ideas with an American professor. He is Hy Fish, of Roosevelt College, Chicago, a consultant to the government on productivity under the auspices of the International Labor Office, a specialized agency of the United Nations.

Between them they have drawn up a training manual for a multiplying series of courses in productivity that are to spread across the country in the coming months. This is the latest in a series of Israeli efforts to do something about the slackness of productivity in the country, which labor and management have both recognized as one of the big hurdles on the way to self-support.

The establishment of the productivity institute itself last year was the first move. The new economic policy begun in February made productivity one of its main planks. In June, labor and management signed an agreement that established work production committees in all plants with more than fifty employes. Composed of five workers and five representatives of management and an alternating chairman, these committees have been devoting themselves to increasing productivity.

In some cases the measures taken have resulted in remarkable successes, as in the case of one plant that increased its output 200 per cent and raised its p[illegible] to United States levels [illegible]

They will conduct an intensive two weeks course after which each pair will return to his factory to apply their new knowledge. For a period of six weeks an instructor from the productivity institute will pass half a day a week in each factory. In the ninth week all instructors and students will meet again and report on the results.

Discussing his work, Professor Fish said most people imagined that by instituting norms they could win the battle of productivity. He placed norms and premiums last on his list of steps that should be taken to increase factory productivity. First, he said, was organization including the delegation of authority; second, was pro-

Third Annual Tests Show More Armed Skill

Progress in shaping Israel's armed forces into a smooth fighting machine was noted by observers who witnessed the first phase of the annual maneuvers in progress in the hills of Galilee. These were the third annual maneuvers, but it was the first time that commanders of rival forces were permitted to devise their own strategy. After a week of operations observers said officers used sound military judgment and there was little of the reckless individual enterprise that characterized Israeli fighting in the war against the Arabs.

The first maneuvers two years ago simply tested the machinery for a call-up of reserves. Last year rival forces carried out operations laid down by general headquarters. This year headquarters assigned two forces to territory on either side of a "no man's land". They were told to imagine a situation where forces in the north decided to provoke a border incident as a pretext for invasion and to be met by forces in the south.

Military attachés of the United States, Britain and France were conducted through the area by Israeli liaison officers. The second phase of the maneuvers will be held in the central sector and the third phase in the Negev plains with the participation of armor and [illegible]

Doctor Made Landmark Of East Side Drug Store

Dr. Adolf D. Lindemann, long active in medical, civic and philanthropic affairs, a well known old-time drug merchant on the Lower East Side of New York, died in Polyclinic Hospital after a brief illness. He was 83 years old. His home was at 60 Gramercy Park North.

Dr. Lindemann, who retired in 1936 because of illness, was known in pharmaceutical circles as a pioneer in cut-rate selling. The Lindemann Drug Store at 153 Rivington Street, considered an East Side landmark, dispensed only drugs, patent medicines and toiletries.

The pharmacist manufactured more than one hundred preparations himself, and in the small store, some 2,000 customers were served daily by twenty clerks. The establishment is still in existence, although under different ownership since Dr. Lindemann sold it in 1936.

Born in Tarnopol, Austria, Dr. Lindemann came to New York in 1867. He received pharmacy degrees from the Brooklyn College of Pharmacy and in 1905 was graduated from the Baltimore University School of Medicine as an M. D. In 1896 he married Sally Neustaedter, sister of the neurologist, Dr. Marcus Neustaedter.

Dr. Lindemann was well known for his philanthropies. Members of the more than 200 organizations to which he belonged had prescriptions filled at his store at a fixed rate of 25 cents; many who could not afford even that received medicines free, reports the New York [illegible]

Jewries Abroad To Assist In Event Of 1954 Celebrating 300th Year Of Jews In U.S.

Plans for international participation in the nation-wide celebration in 1954-55 of the 300th anniversary of the first Jewish settlement in the United States were announced by Ralph E. Samuel, chairman of the American Jewish Tercentenary Committee, from The New York International Airport, Idlewild, Queens, on a Pan American clipper for Europe to discuss with Jewish leaders in England, The Netherlands and France the international implications of the observance.

The event to be celebrated is the arrival in New Amsterdam on September 7, 1654, of twenty-three Jews who had been expelled by the Spaniards from Curacao after they took over the colony from the Dutch. The tercentenary program calls for observing the entire parade of events in Jewish history in America in the last three centuries rather than the single event of 1654. Three fundamental elements will go into the formulation of a balanced program, it was explained.

They are research and publication, public education, through which the story can be told to 5,000,000 Jews in particular and 156,000,000 Americans in general, and community observances in New York and elsewhere.

Mr. Samuel while in London will arrange liaison meetings between his committee and the organizers of an Anglo-Jewish anniversary celebration to be held in Great Britain in 1956. He will meet with Dr. Israel Brodie, Chief Rabbi of the United Kingdom; Dr. Abraham Cohn, president of the Board of Deputies of British Jews; Dr. Cecil Roth, historian; and Ewan Montagu, president of the Anglo-Jewish Association of Great Britain.

In the Netherlands, Mr. Samuel will confer with Eduard Spier, chairman of the Permanent Commission for General Affairs of the Netherlands Jewish Community; Rabbi J. Tal; Prof. E. M. Meyers; Prof. I. Kisch of the University of

Grateful D.P. Goes As Doctor To U.S. Rural Areas

Dr. William L. Kraus, twenty-nine, who was a German slave laborer in 1942, began his medical career as an intern at Roosevelt Hospital. As one of the first displaced persons to arrive in the United States in 1947, Dr. Kraus worked his way through Harvard Medical School on scholarships and on his salary as a laboratory assistant. In June he was graduated magna cum laude.

At the hospital Dr. Kraus said the medical career was the second of his life's ambitions; the first — citizenship in the United States — he realized on June 2, "No one", he said, "could belong to a finer country. It has been so good to me since I have been here."

To return this kindness, Dr. Kraus said that after he finished his internship, he would practice [illegible] because [illegible] like [illegible] rural areas need a lot of help.

Dr. Kraus was born in Augsberg, Germany. As a Jew, he was interned at the Jena, Germany, labor camp, where he dug the foundations for a factory. He escaped three weeks before liberation of the camp in 1945. In 1947 the Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society sponsored his immigration.

Zionists, Non-Zionists And The State Of Israel

BY DR. NAHUM GOLDMANN, CHAIRMAN, JEWISH AGENCY FOR PALESTINE

Any attempt to foster differences of opinion with the State will be harmful both to Israel and to the Zionist movement. The Jewish people throughout the world want a strong Israel. This is both justifiable and understandable. It is true that we have no legal right to interfere in its affairs, since the world is organised in such manner that only citizens are responsible for their State. It is our duty at this time to assist those who bear the chief responsibility for the State and to cooperate with the State, to analyse their actions and to express opinions of these actions. Our chief task is not to compete with the State, but to explain to the Jewish people that the State needs them.

It is necessary to come to the Jews and to say to them: You were in serious error four years ago when you assumed that the political successes which led to the proclamation of Israel and the fortunate miracle of the victorious war had obviated the need for a Zionist movement. For this we paid dearly. Should we speak to Jews in this manner, they will understand us. When Jews are told that their aid to Israel must be extended through our movement they will respond affirmatively. This should be our approach to the Jewish people.

The Zionist movement faces a paradoxical situation. It is time to speak frankly about it. We must enlist more Jews to aid Israel. The State is granting status to the movement. This is [illegible] reasonable. Since the State [illegible] the help of every Jew it can [illegible] if we want to serve as the [illegible] for the mobilization of [illegible] We must grant the State [illegible] assistance. Indeed, we are [illegible] so. At this stage of develop[illegible] financial needs are the most pressing, and I believe that this situation will continue for many years to come. For immigration has not come to an end, even though there is a temporary lull in its flow. It will occur to nobody that the mass immigration has ended, especially in view of the world situation and the situation in Israel.

But even if we disregard new immigration, have the previous immigrants been adequately absorbed? I doubt that we can say so. This imposes upon us responsibilities which we are not free to disregard. But these responsibilities to some extent hinder Zionist ideological development. A conflict of this nature has always existed in the Zionist movement, but as long as the budget amounted to a million pounds or so, the conflict was not pronounced. Now that the financial problems are of large scope, this conflict is keenly felt.

In order to mobilize the aid of all Jews for Israel, we must unite them. But when we want to proclaim the Zionist ideology, and explain that Zionism means more than aid to Israel, difficulties arise. If Zionism means no more than aid for Israel, I would be willing to substitute a "Friends of Israel" for the Zionist movement. But we want Zionism because it means so much more than this.

Let me cite you a concrete example. At the last Congress, the question of Chalutziut was debated and it made a bad impression in America. It frightened and raised a furor among some staunch friends of Israel. We were thus placed in a difficult position. It is no easy matter for Zionists to renounce pioneering. On the other hand, to renounce the help of these friends means losing 30-40 million dollars of aid to Israel.

I have always said that though Zionists must look after Eretz Israel they must not forget that there are Jews all over the world. This debate has gone on for years. I think that the Zionist movement in America has suffered from too much "Palestine centeredness." It performs great things for Israel, raises funds, but its influence is felt in American Jewish life. I did not say that it has no influence at all, but it does not occupy the position to which it is entitled. [illegible] six hundred thousand organized Jews in America. Organizationally we are the strongest group in America, but we exercise an insignificant influence in the Jewish communities, and in the Councils and the Welfare Funds and in the U. S. True, individual Zionists have plunged themselves into community work. However, Zionism as an organized force has not yet begun to function on the local community level.

The Jews of America will place themselves at your disposal for Israel if we will look after their local needs. We cannot tell American Jews much longer: "You must provide the funds and the political support for Israel, but we shall not help you resolve your local problems." Zionists must take part in local activities. If we set out to perform this in organized fashion, a clash with other Jewish groups may be unavoidable. This might affect the flow of financial support to Israel. How can we cope with this paradoxical situation? We must choose between our responsibility towards the State and its prosaic but sacred needs, and the long term policy of the Zionist movement for winning the Jewish people and assuming the leadership in local Jewish institutions.

This is a serious problem. I think that there is only one solution. We must create two instrumentalities. One would be a joint venture with all other Jewish bodies wishing to render economic and political assistance to Israel. This instrumentality might assume the form of an enlarged Jewish Agency or some other organizational framework. The Zionist movement could then free itself for full Zionist activity, including intensified Chalutziut. The basis for collaboration in the more-inclusive body would be an agreement that each partner is free to perform his own special functions outside that body. As Zionists we would do what we wish, even as the others would engage in their non-Zionist activities.

We do not interfere with the American Jewish Committee when it raises funds for the struggle against anti-Semitism, and we would not face interference in raising funds for Chalutziut and other Zionist work. I do not say that it will be easy to achieve this, but it seems to me that it is not an impossibility. For this reason I am in favor of an enlarged Jewish Agency. This question has not yet approached the discussion stage. But it seems to me that it will become an urgent question as soon as the Zionist movement is granted its special status. I want you to understand this inner contradiction. On the one hand we want to unite all Jews who are willing to aid Israel, and on the other hand a situation must obtain that will give us freedom of action for the principles of full and unadulterated Zionism.

We now approach the second problem, the relations of Zionism and the State. The State would not have agreed to grant us status, had there not been an appreciation of the fact that the State needs the Zionist movement. There are conclusions to be drawn from this. If the cooperation of the Zionist movement is required, if the Zionist movement is to serve as the agent mobilising the Jewish people's assistance to Israel, and establishing bonds between the masses of Jews and Israel, then it is desirable that Israel should change its own view of the Zionist movement. Let me

18 Agencies Cite Woman For Foster Care

A foster mother who has aided the New York Department of Welfare by providing a home for twenty under-privileged children during the last fifteen years received a citation from Henry L. McCarthy, head of the department. The recipient was Mrs. Sarah Scharaga, 59-year-old widow of 618 Pine Street, Brooklyn, who was selected by the Mayor's Commission on Foster Care of Children. She has five children between the ages of 11 to 18 under her care.

She was commended also by Mr. McCarthy for having inspired residents of her own community as well as members of her family to assist in this work. One of her two daughters, Mrs. Grace Hochstadt of 170 McKinley Avenue, Brooklyn, attended the ceremony and luncheon.

Mrs. Scharaga said she had derived great satisfaction since entering the welfare field in the response she had received from those she has aided. Only recently, she said, one of her foster children who had lived with her for sixteen years was married in her home.

Dr. I. Edwin Goldwasser, a member of the Mayor's committee, said Mrs. Scharaga was recommended for the citation by the eighteen child-caring agencies that cooperate in foster care work. Certificates of merit were presented also to the representatives of these organizations.

Children who are excessively shy are often considered dull if the condition is not understood by their elders. While children differ in their degrees of sociability, some are shy because they lack self reliance and the ability to associate with others. Small responsibilities at home and more freedom from Mummy's apron strings may help the child to become more sociable with others.

The Strange Story Of The Magen David

BY H. ART

One day David prayed to God to be allowed to end one of the blessings in the Amidah with the words "Magen David" in the same way as the first of these blessings ends with "Magen Abraham," Shield of Abraham.

God answered him, however: "You must not compare yourself with Abraham. He passed gloriously all ten tests imposed on him. But you failed in the case of Bathsheba. Therefore be satisfied that one of the blessings following the Haftarah may end with "Magen David".

(Midrash Tehillim.)

It is impossible to give the exact date of the above-quoted Midrash, nor that of the origin of the blessing to which it refers. The Midrashic collections, as we possess them today, were compiled by various unknown editors during a period of several hundred years. It is safe to say that the term "Magen David" must have been familiar to Jews as early as 300 C.E.

The Midrashic term, however, did not refer to the six pointed star, the hexagram consisting of two intertwined triangles which we find today as a Jewish emblem on ceremonial objects in Synagogues, as the insignia of the Jewish Brigade and now emblazoned on the flag of the State of Israel. The name and the symbol were not originally linked together. The name is much older and refers to God as the protector and defender of those who believe in Him. But it is consistent with human nature that pure ideas require concrete expression and thus the symbolic term of God "Shield of David" underwent [illegible] phonic towards a shield [illegible] protects the warrior in battle.

Small wonder that magic powers were ascribed to David's shield —powers hidden either in the name of God engraved on the golden shield, or in another magic symbol visible thereon. What kind of symbol?

Gerhard Scholem, Professor of Jewish Mysticism at the Hebrew University, in an article on the Curious History of the Six-Pointed Star (Commentary, September, 1949), quotes the book Akedath Yitzchak by the noted Spanish preacher, Isaac Ben Moses Arama (1420-1494), for the assertion that the emblem on King David's shield was Psalm 67, written in the shape of the Menorah, the seven-branched candelabra.

The Menorah as a cosmological and political symbol has a better right to serve as the symbol of Judaism than the Magen David in its present accepted form. Since the days of the Temple in Jerusalem, the Menorah has been exclusively a Jewish symbol all over the Jewish diaspora. It is, perhaps, this fact which caused the young State of Israel to accept the Menorah flanked by two olive trees (Zachariah, chapter 4, verses 2-3) as its coat of arms.

A symbol ought to be clear and should never speak in riddles. But what about the six-pointed star which was later identified with the Shield of David?

Nothing is more international than magic. Magic signs and designs pass from one nation to another, and ample proof can be shown that the six-pointed star served as a magic seal to many a nation. It was known to the ancient Egyptians, Hindus and Chinese. It is found both as a decoration and as a magical sign on ancient buildings, including the synagogue of Capernaum (second or third century, C.E.) where it is side by side with the swastika. But nobody will contend that the swastika is a Jewish symbol.

While no Magen David has been found in any mediaeval synagogue, or any mediaeval ceremonial object, it can be seen as a decorative motif on many a mediaeval church, e.g., the cathedrals in Brandenburg and Hanover, the Episcopal Palace at Mieux in France, in the old Town Hall of Vienna, on tombstones in Latin America and as a mark on boundary stones in

Eastern Germany. I personally recall having seen a brazen Magen David hanging as a signboard on many taverns and inns in Western Germany, Switzerland and Czechoslovakia, probably because it was the ancient sign of the Pythagorian Fraternity to inform their members that they would be well received at these places.

Thus little significance need be attached to the fact that a Magen David was also found on a tombstone of a Jewish woman in Taranto (Italy), third century C.E., and on an ancient picture of a ship discovered at Sheikhabrak in Israel some time ago. We are confirmed in regarding the Magen David as a magic sign when we read in Cabalistic literature that it should be drawn or tattooed on the skin of a sick person, while the famous Italian rabbi and physician, Isaac Lampronti (1700) says that such a practice is forbidden by the biblical law, "They shall not make any cuttings in their flesh," (Leviticus 21, Verse 5).

It is irony that Hitler ordered the Magen David to be tattooed on the body of the wretched Jewish inmates of his concentration camps after having made the Jewish Star compulsory as a badge of shame.

I once witnessed (in Switzerland) the ceremony of drawing on a bare table a large number of Magen David with one's finger from the wine overflowing at the Havdalah ceremony at the end of Shabbat, the writer inserting the Hebrew letters mem and teth (mazeltov) in the space in the middle.

In this way the Magen David can be explained as a charm to fend off dangers, but Jewish public opinion does not like such disillusioning interpretations, and takes strong exception to the Christian writers who have described the Magen David as the symbol of Christian trinity. These writers forget that, long before the Christians, the Celts used it as a mystic sign of the Druids.

This fact led M. Gudemann to the ingenious hypothesis that the Magen David was actually a Magen Druid, a charm used by the Celtic magicians as a protection against the Drudes, the ghosts of the night. In this way he explains the use of the Magen David on stables, cradles, and on the walls of the room in which a mother labours in childbirth. When the word Drude was not understood any more in later times, the Hebrew letter Resh was left out and it remained the word David.

Gudemann's explanation, however doubtful, finds unexpected support from a South African source. In his book on Germiston Jewry, Mr. A. S. Bernstein reproduces a photograph of the pioneers of the H. O. D. Lodge. In the background there is a huge flag with the inscription "Long live the Hebrew Order of Druids." The inscription is flanked by two crescent moons, and in the centre of each is a Magen David; indeed a curious combination.

Incidentally, I may recall here that during a visit to South West Africa some months ago, I saw in the cemetery of Keetmanshoop, the tombstone of a child, Wolfgang Schleiffer. The tombstone was made in Hamein (Germany), in 1910. On the top it has a Magen David. In the empty space in the middle of the Magen David is a black coffin. Both the name of the child and the place of the tomb indicate that the child was a Christian. The cemetery has a Jewish section.

It seems as if the Magen David's popularity which did not start

CLASS IN COOKERY

CHOCOLATE ANGEL CAKE

one cup egg whites
one-quarter teaspoon salt
one teaspoon cream of tartar
one cup sifted fruit sugar
one teaspoon vanilla three-quarters cup cake flour
one-quarter cup sifted cake flour

Pre-heat oven to 225 degrees. Prepare nine-inch ungreased tube pan. Sift one-half cup sugar, flour, and cocoa together four times. Add salt to egg whites, which are at room temperature, and beat until frothy. Add cream of tartar and continue beating until whites hold soft peak. Add remaining sugar, one tablespoon at a time, and continue beating until whites hold stiff peak. Add vanilla. Fold dry ingrediens gently into egg whites, one-quarter cup at a time. Pour mixture into ungreased tube pan, and bake in 225-degree oven for twenty-five minutes. Remove cake from oven and invert carefully over cake rack until cooled.

one envelope unflavoured gelatin
one cup chilled whipping cream or two-thirds cup ice-cold evaporated milk one-quarter cup cold water six tablespoons granulated sugar
one and one-half cups mashed strawberries

Soak gelatin in one-quarter cup water until softened. Dissolve over hot water and stir until melted, then add sugar. Add gelatin mixture to mashed berries and mix well. Chill until thick and syrupy, then whip until foamy. Mix cream or ice-cold milk until thick, and fold into strawberry mixture. Cool until almost set. Cut cake across, and fill with mixture. The oldtime view that mental illness was a matter for shame or something to be kept secret from the neighbors, has given place to the understanding that emotional disturbance is, like other human illness, often amenable to the right treatment if taken in its earliest stages.

Posture has considerable influence on the general health. The way a person stands, sits or walks affects his ability to endure physical strain and fatigue. Slumping may cause constriction of important organs.

Most people are exposed to tuberculosis germs during their daily life but, with good powers of resistance, are able to resist them. Periodic chest X-ray examinations are the safest way to avoid falling victim to the disease.

Rheumatic fever causes more disabilities among school children than any other disease and often accounts for heart trouble later on in life. A child who is pale, listless and subject to pains in his joints should have a medical examination so that, if the disease is present, early treatment may be given.

All manufacturers do not make their shoes standard as to width and length. Some firms produce a shoe that is either smaller or larger than the same size made by others. When purchasing shoes, it is advisable to have each foot measured and the correct size computed by the salesman.

MARRIAGES

FICHTENBAUM-FLASH

The marriage of Frances, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. Flash, 364 Euclid Avenue, to Solomon Fichtenbaum, son of Mrs. Vita Fichtenbaum, 845 Euclid Avenue, and the late Z. Fichtenbaum, took place on Sunday, June 22, at half-past five o'clock, at Bais Yehu'ah Synagogue, with Rabbi Bernard Rosenweig officiating, assisted by Cantor S. Snider. The bride was given in marriage by her parents. She wore a strapless gown of white nylon illusion, having a bouffant skirt, with a full-length lace redingote, fashioned with high collar, long sleeves, and flared skirt falling to a full train. Her fingertip tulle illusion veil was caught to a crown of seed-pearl beads, and she carried a white Bible adorned with two mauve orchids and streamers. Miss Marlene Flash, the bride's sister, was maid of honour, in a strapless, mauve net gown having a bouffant skirt, with a matching pleated cape, mauve net bonnet, and nosegay of red roses. Fred Simon and Linda Green were miniature bride and groom. Linda wore a turquoise-blue taffeta ankle-length dress, with matching bonnet, trimmed with flowers, and nosegay of varicoloured roses. Harry Fichtenbaum was best man. The ushers were: S. Peck, A. Peck, J. Mandel, M. Civertz, J. Hoffman, A. Morrison, L. Haitman, and A. Groskof. Murray Alter played the wedding music, and at the reception, Mrs. Flash wore a champagne-coloured lace gown, with corsage of pink roses. Mrs. Fichtenbaum was in a royal-blue crepe gown, with corsage of red roses. For the trip to Montreal, Que., the bride left in a beige suit, with cocoa-coloured accessories, white gloves, and mauve orchid corsage. They are residing at 364 Euclid Avenue. Out-of-town guests were: Mr. and Mrs. H. Stein, and Mr. and Mrs. M. Flash and son, Harold, of Montreal, Que.; Mrs. E. Wohl and daughter, Bella, of New York.

Invented U.S. Army Glove

Benjamin Golomb, fifty-seven, co-founder and secretary-treasurer of the Benlee Sporting Goods Manufacturing Co., 22 W. 21st Street, New York, died at University Hospital. He lived at 301 E. 21st Street.

Mr. Golomb, known in boxing circles as Benny Lee and Benny Everlast, was born in Riga, Latvia, and came to the United States at the age of six. When he was twelve he entered the prize-fighting business as a mascot to the late Stanley Ketchel, former middleweight champion.

Mr. Golomb cultivated a wide acquaintance among boxers, managers and political figures, and in 1916 he joined his brothers, the late Jacob Golomb and Morris Golomb, in establishing the Everlast Sporting Goods Manufacturing Co. The name "Everlast" prominently printed on the front of the broad elastic that supports boxers' trunks, appeared in hundreds of news photos of championship matches and helped to advertise the company's products.

Benny Everlast, as chief contact man for his company, became an acquaintance of Jack Dempsey, Benny Leonard, James A. Farley and others prominent in boxing and politics.

In 1941 Mr. Golomb and his son, Lester, established the Benlee Co., making its trade name as familiar as that of Everlast. Handling a general line of sporting goods, it designed special baseball gloves for Buddy Kerr and Don Newcombe and experimented tirelessly with new glove designs. One three-fingered fielders' glove engulfed the ball so greedily that it had to be abandoned; the fielders couldn't get the ball out to throw it, says the New York Herald Tribune.

Three years ago, Mr. Golomb's company designed a special safety-pad boxing glove for the Army which was adopted as the official fighting glove three months ago, when Mr. Golomb released the patent on it to the armed forces. The principal feature of the glove is a non-slip padding which prevents bunching or gaps in its protective layer, reducing the danger of bruises and cuts in boxing matches.

Surviving besides his son, are his wife, Mrs. Lee Golomb, whose first name forms the last part of the company name; two brothers, Max and Jules Golomb, and three sisters, Mrs. Jean Davis, Mrs. Eva Wolman and Mrs. Estelle Stall.

At many summer resorts or country places, pasteurized milk is not available. Raw milk may be infected with the germs of undulant fever, septic sore throat, scarlet fever or tuberculosis. For safety's sake, raw milk should be pasteurized by heating to 155 degrees fahrenheit and then cooling quickly.

Foot exercises not only keep feet supple but also help to prevent tiredness. Picking up marbles with the toes, walking around the room on the outside edges of the feet and rising and lowering on the toes, are all helpful ways of keeping the feet in good condition. Daily bathing, proper drying and a dusting with good foot powder make for good health for the feet.

Top Shubert Aide Began As Typist

Elias Weinstock, general booking agent for the Shubert Theatre Corporation for the last fifteen years, died of a heart attack at his home, 1 Waverley Place, New York. His age was 63. An employe of the Shubert organization, where he started as a typist forty years ago, Mr. Weinstock became one of the best informed men in the field of theatrical booking, says the New York Times.

Through his association with the Shubert office, he was one of three booking executives of the United Booking Office at 234 West Forty-fourth Street, New York, which makes arrangements for the majority of road shows. Mr. Weinstock attained this position in January, 1940, after the death of Jules Murry, of the Shubert staff, with whom he had served as an assistant. Mr. Weinstock also was manager of the Booth Theatre, 222 West Forty-fifth Street, New York.

A leader in religious and philanthropic circles, Mr. Weinstock had been president of Temple Israel for the last two years and had been active in the men's club of the Flora Wald Aid Society, whose membership embraces residents of neighboring communities. He was a member also of the Woodmere Club.

Surviving are his widow, the former Estelle Barit; two daughters, Mrs. Florence Schoeman, of Lawrence, and Mrs. Judith Barasch of Rockville Centre; a brother, Benjamin Weinstock of Teaneck, N. J.; a sister, Mrs. David Tolk, and four grandchildren.

Volunteered As Malaria, Yellow Fever Fighter

Michael W. Herwitz, a Spanish-American War veteran who volunteered as a nurse in the battle against yellow fever and malaria, died in New York Hospital after an operation. His age was 72. Mr. Herwitz was one of two survivors of the fifteen men in his company who volunteered for the hazardous duty in Cuba. He had served with the First Illinois Infantry, Chicago.

Born in New York, he attended the Chicago Kent Law College, part of Lake Forest University. He practiced law in Illinois from 1[illegible] to 1910, and then returned to New York to become chief accountant for a construction concern.

Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Hetty Herwitz of the Regent Hotel, Broadway and 104th Street; two sons, Oren C. Herwitz, special assistant to Attorney General William B. Herlands, and Victor J. Herwitz, assistant corporation counsel; a daughter, Mrs. Edith Shapiro of Norwalk, Conn., and three grandchildren.

The first housing project for Israeli immigrants from United States and Canada was begun when ground was broken for ten houses at K'far Haroah, a village near the city of Hadera, about thirty five miles north of Tel-Aviv. Residents of the new project will be professional people, five of them teachers. Land for the project, sponsored by the Hitachdut Olei America, the Association of American Immigrants, was given by the Jewish National Fund.

ZIONISTS, NON-ZIONISTS AND THE STATE OF ISRAEL

quote a phrase of our colleague Zlonia Aran:

The State should consider the Zionist movement its ambassador to the Jewish people. The Zionist movement must seek to solve and coordinate the great problems of Jewish life which impinge on Israel. I know that this cannot be accomplished overnight, or by means of legislation. But there should be an effort in this direction. This does not mean that the representatives of the State may not maintain contact with individual Jews.

The 23rd World Zionist Congress adopted a resolution pledging its unswerving cooperation with the State of Israel and its government. I fought for that resolution. Ben Gurion was right when he argued that it is impossible to grant recognized status to the Zionist Organization without such loyalty. I stated that a Zionist movement which fights the government of Israel is an impossibility. That resolution was adopted, and was endorsed in good faith by the Agency Executive which promptly used the resolution as a basis for its activities. Consequently, the government should have addressed itself to the Agency and requested it to intervene in certain controversial matters on the American Jewish Scene.

This is what I mean when I speak of the Zionist Organization as an ambassador to the Jewish people. This is much more important for the authority of the Zionist movement than a formally recognized status, though I do not underestimate the latter. We have a tendency to belittle anything that we do not obtain in full measure — 100%. This, too, is an outgrowth of a sense of inferiority. The status law may not contain all points we have asked for. But it is a good draft law. More important than the law itself, is the attitude. If the basic principle of the Zionist organization movement is cooperation with the government, then the representatives of the State must consider the people of the Zionist organization as their representatives within the Jewish people.

We want to cooperate with the State and the government, but let not the government people feel that its sovereignty will be diminished by a show of confidence in us.

I wish to conclude this discussion with the following: Let Zionists stop envying the glamor and glory of the State, and let the representatives of the State cease being sensitive about their authority. If the Agency in New York were asked to solve various local problems, would that in any way infringe upon the sovereignty of Israel in the United Nations? We demanded and have finally reached a decision about a recognized standing for the Zionist Organization in Israel. I realize that two years ago such a decision could not have been made. But now that we have attained it, let it be implemented sincerely and without pettiness.

before the nineteenth century, was due to the outward design which distinguishes it from the Christian cross and the crescent of Islam. Only later on a number of explanations were offered which associated the hexagram with more or less established Jewish conceptions, e.g., the six days of creation, or the six earthly directions representing the omnipresence of God.

We find the hexagram conquering the synagogues during the past hundred years, and the second Zionist Congress (Basle, 1898), incorporated it as a Jewish symbol in the Jewish flag, disregarding Jehuda Leib Gordon's earlier warning (1884) not to accept it on account of its pagan origin. Scholem, in his above-mentioned essay, quoted Jacob Reifman, the contemporary of Zunz, who as early as 1875 had cried out against the Magen David, recalling the biblical verse "They mingled themselves with the nations and learned their works." (Psalm 106, Verse 35.)

The Magen David is thus certainly not a Jewish symbol wrought with antiquity, but it has become Jewish by the fascinating process of positive assimilation, incorporating values of the outside world into Jewish life and making them an integral part of Jewish folklore. One readily agrees with Scholem when he says that the sign under which millions of Jews went to destruction has been sanctified by suffering and torture, and has thus won its right to be the sign that will light up the road of construction and life.

Israel's Nationality Law

The right of every Jew to come to Israel was formally embodied in Israel legislation by the Law of the Return 5710—1950, which was passed by the Knesset on the 5th July, 1950 and came into effect nine days later on its publication in Reshumot, the Israel Official Gazette.

A further step for the integration into the State of Israel of all Jews coming to the country has now been taken by the Knesset in the Nationality Law, 5712—1952, passed on the 1st April, 1952. That law came into force on the 14th July, 1952, two years after the Law of the Return, 5710—1950 came into force.

According to the Nationality Law, Israel nationality is acquired in one of four ways—by virtue of return, residence in Israel, birth, or naturalisation. The law confers Israel nationality by virtue of return on every Jew who came to the country as an immigrant before the date upon which the Law of the Return, 5710—1950 came into force, every Jew born in the country, whether before or after that date, and every Jew settling in Israel after that date, unless he has ceased to be resident in Israel before the date of the commencement of the law (14th July, 1952), or, being over 18 years of age, and a foreign national, he has declared that he does not wish to be an Israel national, or, if he is under 18 years of age, he is included in such a declaration made by his parents.

Jews who immigrated before the date of the establishment of the State (15th May, 1948), or were born in the country before that date, acquire Israel nationality from that date. Jews immigrating into Israel after the date of the establishment of the State acquire Israel nationality from the date upon which they immigrate, while Jews born in Israel after the 15th May, 1948 acquire Israel nationality from the date of their birth.

Special provisions are made for the automatic acquisition of Israel nationality by former Palestinian citizens who do not become Israel nationals by virtue of return. Such persons became Israel nationals if they fulfilled three conditions, namely, if on the 1st March, 1952, they were registered as a resident under the Registration of the Inhabitants Ordinance, 5709—1949; if they were resident in Israel on the date of the commencement of the Nationality Law, 5712—1952 (14th July, 1952) and, if during the period from the 15th May, 1948 to the 14th July, 1952, they have been resident in Israel, or in territory after the 15th May, 1948, or they have legally entered Israel within that period.

The law provides that all persons fulfilling those three conditions acquire Israel nationality as from the 15th May, 1948, although it is difficult to see why persons who legally entered Israel after the 1st May, 1948 should become Israel nationals as from that date, even if they were Palestinian citizens, as such a provision may lead to difficulties.

Persons born in Israel after the 15th May, 1948, and resident in Israel on the 14th July, 1952, one of whose parents was a former Palestinian citizen and acquired Israel nationality by fulfilling the conditions described above become Israel nationals as from the date of their birth.

The third way in which Israel nationality may be acquired is by birth. If at the time a person is born his father or mother is an Israel national, such person acquired Israel nationality as from the date of his birth. If his father has died before he is born, he is an Israel national as from the date of his birth if his father was an Israel national at the time of his death. Nothing is stated in the law as to the place of birth of a person acquiring Israel nationality by birth, nor is anything said about the manner of acquisition of Israel nationality by his father or mother, so that it would appear that a person born of a father or mother who is an Israel national, will be an Israel national from birth, wherever born and howsoever his father or mother acquired Israel nationality.

A person desiring to acquire Israel nationality by naturalisation must, in addition, fulfil six conditions.

He must be in Israel, and have been in Israel for three years out of the five years preceding his application, and he must be entitled to reside permanently in Israel and have settled, or intend to settle, in Israel. In addition, he must have some knowledge of the Hebrew language and have renounced his former nationality or proved that he will cease to be a foreign national when he becomes an Israel national. After he has fulfilled all those conditions he must make a declaration that he will be a loyal national of the State of Israel, and his acquisition of Israel nationality will take effect as from the date of his declaration.

Some persons, however, may acquire Israel nationality by naturalisation without compliance with all those conditions. Thus persons who have served in the regular service of the Defence Army of Israel, or have served after the 29th November, 1947, in any other service proclaimed by the Minister of Defence in a proclamation published in Reshumot, and has been duly released, as well as persons who have lost a son or daughter in such service, may become naturalised as Israel nationals on fulfilling only one of the six conditions, namely, that they have settled, or intend to settle, in Israel.

A foreign national entitled to Israel nationality by virtue of return who has declared that he does not wish to become an Israel national, will, if he subsequently applies for Israel nationality by naturalisation, be exempt from complying with the condition of being in Israel for three years out of the five years preceding his application. A person who, immediately prior to the establishment of the State was a Palestinian citizen may acquire Israel nationality by naturalisation without having any knowledge of the Hebrew language.

Finally, the Minister of the Interior who is charged with the implementation of the Nationality Law may, if there is a special reason justifying the exemption, exempt an applicant for naturalisation from all or any of the six conditions described above, other than the conditions that the applicant is entitled to reside permanently in Israel and has settled, or intends to settle, in Israel.

No provision is made in the Law for the acquisition of Israel nationality by a woman on marrying an Israel national, but it is provided that where a husband or wife is an Israel national, or has applied for naturalisation and fulfils the conditions for naturalisation or is exempt from them, the wife or husband, as the case may be, may receive Israel nationality notwithstanding the fact that he or she may be under eighteen years of age or does not comply with the conditions for naturalisation.

On the other hand, when a person becomes naturalised, his minor children become naturalised by virtue of his naturalisation. Furthermore, special provisions are made for the naturalisation of children under eighteen years of age whose parents are not in Israel, have died or are unknown. If such children are not Israel nationals and are resident in Israel, the Minister of the Interior may grant them a certificate of naturalisation on such conditions and with effect from such date as he may think fit.

Israel nationality may be lost in one of two ways, either by renunciation or cancellation of naturalisation. No provision is made for depriving persons of their Israel nationality against their will if they acquired it otherwise than by naturalisation.

The only persons who may renounce Israel nationality are nationals over eighteen years of age who are not resident in Israel and then only with the consent of the Minister of the Interior. Should such a person renounce his Israel nationality, his minor children, if not resident in Israel, will lose their Israel nationality, unless the other parent remains an Israel national.

There are three grounds upon which a naturalised Israel national may lose his nationality. The first ground is that he acquired his nationality on the basis of false particulars. The second ground is that he has been abroad from seven consecutive years and has no substantial connection with the country, and has not proved that such connection ceased against his will. The last ground is that he committed an act which constitutes a breach of loyalty to the State of Israel.

The cancellation of naturalisation will be effected by a District Court upon the application of the Minister of the Interior, and the Court may, upon such application, decide that the cancellation shall apply also to the children of the person whose naturalisation is being cancelled, if they acquired Israel nationality by naturalisation and are resident abroad.

Save in the case where a person acquires Israel nationality by naturalisation and the Minister of the Interior has not waived the requirement of renunciation by the applicant of his foreign nationality, the acquisition of Israel nationality does not depend upon the renunciation of a former nationality. As a result, Israel nationals may have a double nationality by retaining their former nationality although as far as Israel law is concerned, they will be deemed to be Israel nationals.

Generally speaking, the effect of the Nationality Law will be that the vast majority of the persons resident in Israel will be Israel nationals, and only in exceptional cases will a resident of Israel lose his Israel nationality. On the other hand, there will be many persons of double nationality in Israel unless according to their foreign national law they lose their foreign nationality on acquiring Israel nationality.

Amsterdam, and other leaders of the Dutch Jewish community.

Mr. Samuel, who is a former president of the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies, said in discussing plans for the observance:

"We are not observing this anniversary two years hence merely to remind ourselves and our neighbors that we have been here for a long time. We came here for the same reasons that other settlers came—to seek freedom and opportunity. We shall celebrate this anniversary, therefore, both as Jews and as Americans, dedicated to the ideals of liberty and human dignity.

"We could not properly celebrate three centuries of American Jewish history without recognizing the influence of the early colonial powers. When we hold our celebration, we shall stress the international implications of the 300-year-old record."

Mr. Samuel announced that Albert M. Greenfield, Philadelphia real estate dealer and community leader, had accepted the chairmanship of the Tercentenary's finance committee and would organize a fund-raising program this fall. Program planning, Mr. Samuel said, will be conducted by a committee headed by former Supreme Court Justice Samuel I. Rosenman, advisor to the late President Roosevelt.

250,000 yearly for these two thinly populated members of the British Commonwealth, there would be little for Italy and Greece to look forward to in such programs. Southern Europeans are not excluded from selection by the Anglo-Saxon countries, but they are rarely selected. There is a rueful saying that even the gods of ancient Greece could not meet the requirements laid down for their modern countrymen by the selection boards of most countries.

Nations that are prepared on religious, racial and national grounds to accept large numbers of Southern Europeans at present are incapable of coping with settlement problems after the immigrants arrive. They lack the strong voluntary organizations that played such a great part in taking care of displaced persons admitted to the United States after World War II.

Some of these countries, notably Brazil, have asked the international migration committee to consider the possibility not only of transporting immigrants, but of assuming broad responsibilities for developing projects that would enable the Latin American countries to accept large numbers of new citizens.
